Rooseveit will proceed to the speakers' stund, reaching it at or about 1 o'clock in the afternoon. There, surrounded by the autumn beauty of the great trees, with a dozen historic spots within reach of his eye, and to an audience that will two or three times fill the eight acras of the park, he will deliver his message to the South.

An hour later the luncheon will begin, perhaps the most brilliant function of this sort ever arranged here.

Still closely guarded the President will then begin his drive over the city that will unquestionably prove one of the most notable features of the day. At Lee monument, standing in the shadow of the broize figure of their commander, the tottering gray-clad veterans from the Soldiers' Home will be assembled to half the new chief, and it is not unlikely that he will tarry here and speak to the men who once, in the old days, fought against the flag they now so proudly hold aloft. At the White House of the Confederacy, where monther President, Jefferson Davis, once directed the destinies of the same cause for which these scarred old men struggled, he will stop again, and there he will be joined by Wirs, Roosevelt. One or two other places will be visited, and by this time the hour for departing will be near. At 7 P. M. the President and his party will leave for the farther South.

City Ablaze.

Such in brief is the programme for the day. The city is ablaze with color, and a myriad flags are fluttering. Pictures of the President and welcoming legends appear at every point. The buildings along the line of march and hundreds of residences and stores in other sections are hidden behind the national colors. Glant banners wave from many housetops and the Stars and Stripes float from telegraph poles, windows and every other available spot from which a display could be made. An air of hustle and suppressed excitement is over everything. It is novel for old Richmond—novel but pleasing and beyond all things sightly to the eye.

A hundred thousand people will be in A hundred thousand people will be in the streets to-day. There are many strange faces in the city already, and the special trains will pour a stream of others in before noon to-day. Senator John W. Daniel reached Richmond last night, and is at the Jefferson. Senator Martin will be here, and at least four of the congressmen—Carter Glass, H. D. Flood, H. L. Maynard and Campbell lying manufacturing plants will sight the train first and will begin the noisy state. It will be taken up at once by the others in all sections, and will be continued until it has spread over the entire city, which for a few minutes will be recking with shricks.

Mr. Thomas Nelson Page will be at th luncheon. General Scott Shipp came in yesterday afternoon from Lexington.

A gelect committee, consisting of Governor Montague, Mayor McCarthy and Captain W. H. Curtis, chairman of the Council Committee on Reception, will enter the train and formally greet, Mr. Roosevelt. The party will then enter the station and after meeting the full Reception Committee will be escorted to the waiting carriages. The station will be roped off and the crowds held strictly back.
